

5. Abstract:

"Weak Adaptation of Global Trends is Impact on Role and Objectives of Local Government Institutions in the Developing Countries".

The main purpose of this paper is to exploring changing pattern of global economic and political ideology impact on Local government institutions in third world countries. Local government is a vital factor of any given country regarding their economic, social and political enhancement. Also, it is foundation stone of the any given country with regard form of the political system. There are different kinds of local government systems can be shown in the many countries in the world. Global ideology on economic and politics rapidly has been changed in recent history. Simultaneously, Local government system of developing countries could not properly restructure of their system with parallel to such global trends. Meanwhile, Global ideology regarding role of local government system has been signified regarding economic and political development. Therefore, international institutions and other forces have emphasized local government system of developing countries as a vital factor for achieve their millennium targets. Therefore, comparatively, most developed countries and their local government system could achieved their millennium targets with changing pattern of the global trends Yet, developing countries and their local government institutions has shown lack of achievement in their millennium targets. Why? This paper has been examined the main factors regarding lack of economic and political achievements of the local government institutions in the third world. Mainly, global institutions such as World Bank United Nations Organization and other global financial institutions and their perspectives have been investigated in this regard. Global literature on democracy, governance, and local government and their nature and activities has been critically examined in this paper. In this empirical study, both primary and secondary resources have been applied to analyze the existing situation of local government institutions in the selected third world countries. In this paper has been found that lack of democratic practices and conservative perspectives have been negatively impact on re-adjustments of the political, structural sphere and decisions making process with regard achievements of the local government institutions in the selected developing countries. Final output of this paper will be opened for the conduct further researches who desire to investigate nature and dynamics of local government institutions in the third world countries.

Key Words: Global Changes, Lack of adjustment, Lack of Practices, Role and Object