To prove this he examines a wide array of positions and texts within the western canon as well as in Chinese philosophy, history and literature, to make a case for the importance of pluralism in moral life, and to establish the virtues of acceptance and accommodation. Wong's point is that there is no single value or principle or ordering of values and principles that offers a uniquely true path for human life but variations according to different contexts that realize within them a common core of human values. We should thus be modest about our own morality, learn from other's approaches, and accommodate different practices in our pluralistic society. The main objective in this paper is to investigate how Wong forms his theory of adequate moral systems and morality as a social creation in his first publication and how he develops his theory in the later work. Section one I will look closer at how Wong characterizes the debate on subjectivity and objectivity in morality by introducing six claims as a strategy to explain moral experience. Then I will move to critically evaluate Wong's analysis of morality along with his two conceptions of morality and relativity within it. In Second section I will discuss how Wong systematically develops the thesis of pluralistic relativism in his recent
